Don't just give up!

It can't have escaped your notice that 29th March is a significant day. At the time of writing, there is still much uncertainty, and we simply do not know what will be the short term arrangements or the long term effects of Brexit. What is clear, however, is that many people are concerned about the future in different ways, and that it is vital for us all to continue to pray for the communities to which we belong: local, national and international.

But the month of March will be more (I hope!) than Brexit. This year, Ash Wednesday falls on 6th March, and so our focus as a Christian community becomes one of examining more closely our relationship not just with Europe, but with God. Traditionally, of course, many people give things up for Lent. If we want to give up smoking or chocolate or spending too much time on social media, that's fine, but it's good to ask ourselves why we might give something up, or whether there are other ways of making the most of Lent and revitalising our faith.

Perhaps because I like chocolate too much, I have generally tried to be a 'taker up' rather than a 'giver up' during Lent. I usually try to do something extra in three different areas:

1. study
2. the common good
3. prayer.

Study can sound frightening or school-like, but it shouldn't do. It is simply about exploring and learning more about our Christian faith, so that we can be confident to live out that faith in our day to day lives. There will be a number of different opportunities for study at the Cathedral. The Lent groups will be looking at themes from Luke's Gospel, and will be appropriate for all, from those with no previous knowledge, to those who are 'old hands'. And if you can't make one of those groups, there are plenty of good books to read. This year the Archbishop of Canterbury's Lent Book is Reconciliation by Muthuraj Swamy, which provides a series of brief reflections on how human relationships can be restored: with God, with each other, and within ourselves.

Taking something up for the common good could be a simple environmentally-conscious lifestyle change, such as committing to walk more instead of drive, or to re-use food containers instead of disposable plastic. But it could equally be about increasing charitable giving, or about offering some time as a volunteer, whether at the Cathedral or any of the other local charities which are always in need of more person-power.

Prayer too, can be enriched in many different ways. Designating an extra five minutes a day to be quiet with God is one way to begin. So too is deciding to attend an additional act of worship, perhaps once a week; or taking part in a quiet day. And of course when we reach Holy Week, and we follow the same journey we take every year from Palm Sunday to Good Friday, we are challenged to lift up our prayers and take up the Cross.

Lent is above all a season of preparation for the great Feast of Easter, and because of that, it is a season filled with hope. So, whatever happens at the end of this month, we can keep praying, keep studying and keep working for the common good. I for one, won't just be giving up.

A Note from Our Organ Scholar

It has been a huge privilege to be appointed this year's Harold Thornber Organ Scholar here at Blackburn Cathedral. The post is a great stepping stone for me from school to university. I am very lucky to have been able to take advantage of many fantastic opportunities and I am really enjoying working in a vibrant music department; learning from two very experienced organists. The Cathedral is a lovely community to be a part of and one of the most enjoyable parts of the scholarship for me is being able to regularly accompany three of the Cathedral's choirs and play for a whole range of services big and small!

The many performance opportunities available to me, both at the cathedral and in the wider community enrich both my solo playing and my music-making with other musicians. The regular lunchtime recitals are also a great opportunity to meet many masters of the organ and current Cathedral musicians from around the country.

The 'Sing Together' outreach project is an inspiring organisation based at the Cathedral giving primary school children across the whole of Lancashire an exciting musical education which improves their confidence and musical knowledge. It encourages teachers and children alike to sing and concludes with a series of concerts in King George's Hall, Blackburn. This has been a fascinating experience for me, playing the piano for all the school workshop sessions and working with the amateurs to ensure we provide quality opportunities for many primary school pupils to take part in musical performances across the county.

The many experiences I have had so far in this role have consolidated my ambition to pursue a career in Cathedral music and given me the foundations to carry on studying the organ at the Royal Birmingham Conservatoire starting in September.
